The only item of general intelligence apart from the Eastern war is the sudden death of M Thiers, the renowned French statesman, who expired on Tuesday last in his eighty-first year, country had spread such a bright halo on the fame which he had proviously achieved that it inhabited by Dunganies brings information of A general advance was then sounded amidst his obsequies, but neither appear able as yet to of two months, the Danganies, upon the faith of Lem, which was occupied without severe oppoing that his career was more theoretical than practical prior to the late German war, his conny Frenchman, behis religious creed or political belief what it may, can do anything but simply worship his momory. He did indeed pick up France out of the mire. By his wonderful tsot he elicited the tympathies of Europe when none but the "gentlemen of the pavement" appeared at the front, and by the marvellous confidence which his great name inspired he induced the Emperor of Germany and his great Chancellor to pause in their career until he had attempted with wonderful success to gather together the shat. tered fragments of his country and to restore not to kill unarmed people and women and set Bey saw a flag of truce returning fluttering confidence in its adhesiveness and vitality. There is no home topic either political domestic on the topis at all adapted to interest the foreign resident in China, and I must there fore proceed to give the best account I can of. the progress of the war in Bulgaria. The reader most imagine to himself the fact that the Danube runs from east to west and forms the barrier which should have prevented the Russian invasion into Bulgaria. He must also suppose that the Balkan range, some die tance back and running parallel with the Danube, formed a second natural barrier to vent the invader attacking Constantinople in the rear. To the extreme cast of the Danube lies the peninsula of the Dobrudscha, which the that a flood has carried away the bridge over the Turks ovacuated because of its insalabrity and the Russians occupied lest the Turks should cross the Danube and commit raids on their communications. From the Door adsolut commence what is called the Tarkish Quadrilateral, which consists of a line of fortifications commencing at Warns, on the Black Sea, proceeding to Shumla, thence to Rasgrad, and thence to Rustchuk, on the Danube. Silistria, also on the Danube. note as a support to this line of fortifications. Thus If the Russian army of the Dobrudscha were to proceed west and attempt to penetrate the Quadrilateral, the Varna garrison would operate on their rear and cross the Dannbe; Moreover the Quadrilateral could not be penetrated from the east unless Silistria were first captured, or at all events masked, because all the other fortresses of the Quadrilateral could operate on any force besieging Silistria. The Russian plan was therefore this—to cross the Danube west of Rustobuk. and whilst one army was to occupy the Do bradscha to prevent to Turks crossing th Danube, another army was to hom in the Turks in their Quadrilateral, whilst a third army was to cross the Balkans and menace Constantinople. This course was being pursued until the On the 7th inst. the Rev. EXTRACTS. A FEATHER. Drop me a feather out of the blue, Bird flying up to the ann; Higher and higher the alylark flow. But dropped he never a une. "Only a feather I ask of thee

Frosh from the purer arr; ". Unward the lark flew bold and free To heaven, and-vanished there. Unly the sound of a raptuone song

Throbbed in the tremulence light; Only a voice could linger long At such a wondrous height. "Drop me a feather!" but while I cry,

Lo ! like a vision fair The hird from the heart of the glowing sky Sin s through the joyons air. Downward sinking and singing alone;

But the song which was glad above

Takes over a deeper and dearer tone,

For it trembles with earthly love. And the feather Tasked from the boundless heave Were a gift of little worth ; For oh! what a boon by the lark is given

When he brings all heaven to earth! -Blackwood's Magazina.
